

BILLIONAIRE

I found a check for a billion dollars under my car seat. The check worked. I bought a Mac Pro, started a venture capital firm, and start a software company. I would buy a 12,000 dollar Mac Pro with a Xeon processor and 128 gigs of ram. I would also start a venture capital firm and make a lot more money. Finally, I would start a software company and make a cartful of cash. In conclusion, I would buy a Mac Pro, start a venture capital firm and a software company and make a ton of cash.

I would buy a Mac Pro first. My Mac Pro would be a beast. It would have a Intel Xeon with a 2.7 GHz processor with 12 cores and 30MB of L3 Cache. In English, that means it ultra powerful and is an absolute beast. It would 64GB of RAM, which is great. Most computers have 4-8 GB of RAM. It would also have 1TB of SSD. It also has dual graphics cards with 12GB of graphics RAM. Most computers have 1GB of graphics RAM. It also comes with software. Overall, the computer would cost $15,558.88.

Next, I would start a venture capital firm. A venture capital firm invests money into companies and bonds and all that sort of stuff and makes a profit from it. (hopefully) Venture capital firms like Berkshire Hathaway and Sequoia are examples of venture capital firms. Venture capital firms are very profitable, but cost a lot to start up. That's why if you have a lot of money to burn like I do, then I would start a venture capital firm with it.

Finally, I would start a software company. Software company make apps and software for the PC and Mac and the web. Software companies generally do not return as much as venture capital firms, but since that it what I love to do, I want to do it. I would use my Mac Pro to develop iOS apps and make a fine bit of money. Not billions, but a couple millions. I want to do that because it's fun. I would also want to change the world with my money. Make it a better place. I could do that by writing apps that inspire people to do better.

In conclusion, when I found a billion dollars under my car seat, I would buy a really great Mac Pro that is 15,558 dollars, I would start a venture capital firm to double my billion and make a lot more money, and I would use that for other endeavours. I would also start a software development firm for fun and make a little bit of money doing that. That car seat was lucky, after all.
